Grand Opera Birds Learn Jazz Music From American Sailors on Briny Deep

[By Universal Service.]

BERKELEY, Cal., May 15.—In the good old days, when hirds went travelling on the seas, they came back well versed in the profamity of sailors, but now—instead of cussing, the birds learn "jazz."

At least, this proved the case with the six buildnehes of A. H. Hasseler, bird expert, of this city. The finches, known as the "mininture sextet from Lucia" because of their musical abilities, left Germany some weeks ago, versed only in the best of music, singing only the songs of the masters.

But for their valets on the way over, they had various deckhands and trainhands. And these hardy tollers, to relieve their weighty tasks, indulged in singing. But. [By Universal Service.]

being Americans, they sang the songs of America-ragtime and "jazz."

The builânches learn fast and when they arrived here, Hasseler found they were warbling all the latest hits with ease, keeping time with their talls and showing preference for them rather than opera. And so he despairs, far as soon as the "sextet" completes an operatic selection under his direction and is left alone—it bursts out into one of the thousand and one "popular". American pieces. Alss and alack, the "jazz" tends to spoil the birds ears for classical, and so Director Hasseler has settled down to the weary task of making the birds unlears. America's manin—jazz.
